A VICTIM OF OPIUM.

THE AGONY HE ENDURED IN TRYING TO BREAK THE HABIT.

Falling in a Fit on the Sidewalk—The Old
Story—Visions of the Opiate Enter—
The Terrible Awakening.

[Pittsburg Chronicle.]
"The man is in a fit," said a policeman, as he stood over a man who was lying on the sidewalk near Sixth avenue and Smith-street.
"No, he is only drunk," was the opinion of a woman with a countenance of countenance, as she glanced contemptuously at the writhing figure of the tall, well-dressed man, about 40 years of age. The sufferer's mouth twitched convulsively; his eyes, over which the red lids drooped, were covered with a glassy film; from between his chattering teeth bubbled a speck of white froth; his limbs trembled, and his hands groped aimlessly, as if seeking succor from some undefined peril. Then his weak fingers reached his vest pocket, and from thence were transferred to his mouth with a hasty, convulsive movement. The result was magical. Instantly the man straightened up, the anxious twitching of his mouth ceased, the eyes beamed with the fire of lusty manhood, and the whole manner of the whilom shivering wretch was changed.
"It is nothing," he said to the policeman. "A sudden faintness, that is all. I am subject to such spells."
The crowd dispersed, and the man was left alone, save for the presence of the writer. "Rather an awkward thing to be taken that way on the street," was the remark. "I suppose it was the old trouble—opium?"
"Yes; I am under treatment for it, but occasionally I get the better of me, and I am obliged to carry some pills in my pocket in case of emergencies. I have not been so bad before for several weeks. When opium once gets you down it holds you there. I have been studying rather hard lately, and that has run me down."
"What made you commence the use of opium?"
"It happened to me as it has to thousands of others right in this city of Pittsburg. I went to my physician to be treated for nervous prostration, the result of overwork. He commenced me with bromide of potassium. Then when that lost its power, he administered morphine by hypodermic injection. That fixed me up. But it allaying my nervousness it implanted in my being a craving for the drug that would not be satisfied. The hypodermic operation would have been too troublesome for me, so I bought opium in the form of tincture. As you well know, it is necessary to increase the size of the dose slowly but steadily, and in a very few weeks I was a confirmed user of the drug. Opium eating is erroneously called a habit. It is worse than that—it is a disease, as the opium fiend who is giving his experiences in this city will tell you."
"Is there any particular pleasure when under the influence of the drug—after smoking it, for instance?" asked the reporter.
"Only such as is contained in a sense of relief. The stories about opium-smokers finding themselves in a paradise, peopled by hours of surpassing loveliness, and where more delicious dreams than ever strike the imagination in waking moments are enjoyed, is all nonsense. Plain, work-a-day people have no such dreams. They simply enjoy a rest from bodily and mental torments engendered by the very means they are employing for their relief. Then, when the influence of the opium dies away, there come sad horrors as would seem impossible to those who have never fallen victims to this soul-destroying vice. In their sleep they suffer from terrible nightmares. They are constantly on the edge of imaginary precipices, or falling down dizzy heights. Now they are the victims of some fearful accident; again, they are hurried on by some malignant persecution. They fancy that they are drowning, that they are being burned at the stake, inhaling the sickening odor of their own burning flesh, feeling it peel from their aching bones. Then comes the awakening with a start or scream. The gradual realization that these things are not real; the cold sweat, the trembling of the limbs, as you save it in just now, the sense of utter exhaustion, from which you sink into sleep once more, to live again the agonizing scenes of a diseased mind."
"You say you are under treatment. Have you any hope of being cured?"
"Yes; but in the meantime the suffering is horrible—worse than can be described. But if cure does not come, then—"
The gesture was even more suggestive than words would have been.

THE EPISODE OF THE SMELLING BOTTLE.
[New York Letter.]
Society young ladies are greatly excited over the reports of a new disease affecting their facial beauty that has followed the use of the mammoth and clumsy smelling salts bottles that have been in vogue during the past season—something like a cancerous affection of the nose. The combination of chemical salts, cologne spirits and other perfumes or stimulants used in these slug-like bottles acts upon the metallic trimmings of the bottles and creates a substance that affects the nose and nostrils in a manner that cannot fail to impair their beauty and interfere with their future enjoyment.

ROYAL HAWAIIAN HOTEL.
JOSEPH TILDEN Manager.

The Royal Hawaiian Hotel is one of the leading architectural structures of Honolulu. The grounds upon which it stands comprise an entire square of about four acres, fronting on Hotel Street. This large area affords ample room for a lawn and beautiful walks, which are laid out most artistically with flowering plants and tropical trees. There are twelve pretty cottages within this charming enclosure, all under the Hotel management. The Hotel and cottages afford accommodations for 200 guests. The basement of the Hotel contains the finest billiard hall in the city; also, a first-class bar, well stocked with fine wines and liquors.

The main entrance is on the second floor, to the right of which are the elegantly furnished parlors. A broad passage-way leads from the main hall to the dining-room. These apartments open on to broad verandas, where a magnificent view of the Nuananu Mountains may be seen through the wealth of tropical foliage that surrounds the balconies.

The fare dispensed is the best the market affords, and is first-class in all respects. Hotel and cottages are supplied with pure water from an artesian well on the premises. The Clerk's office is furnished with the Telephone, by which communication is had with the leading business firms of the city.
